To whom it may concern:

I taught Sydney Tuff in my American History I (HIS 131) class this past fall semester. She clearly stood out from the other students in the class. She maintained a strong A average and finished with the highest score in the class. She sat near the front of the class so I became better acquainted with her than most of the students.

She was the type of student college instructors enjoy teaching. She had a natural curiosity about the subject matter and wanted to understand important details of everything that was discussed. She asked relevant questions whenever she needed to have a better understanding of a topic. Her inquisitive nature also helped create a better academic setting in the classroom.

Her friendly, affable demeanor also added to an enjoyable teaching experience that spread to the other students. I would certainly recommend Sydney as a strong academic student & positive role model in any college setting. She is a very conscientious student with a mature demeanor away from the classroom. Any college or university would be fortunate to have Sydney as a student.

Sincerely yours,
